It is important for all who write for the press to remember a few things:

1. To know what they are going to say.

2. To be sure that it is worthy of publication.

3. To write distinctly on only one side of the sheet.

4. Not to murder the rules of spelling, grammar,

5. To be short, spirited, and to stop when they 6. To make no guesses about facts, to keep the olden Rule, to be good-natured, and to speak the mest truth, let it shame whom it will.

The pitch to which the spirit of gambling will constime reach is strikingly illustrated in an anecote told by Walpole in one of his letters of an incient at White's Chocolate House—a famous gambling stablishment in London. A man dropped down lead at the door, and was carried in; the club immediate the constitution of the con dead at the door, and was carried in; the club imme-diately made bets whether he was dead or not, and when they were going to bleed him, the wagerers for his death interposed, saying it would affect the fair-ness of the bet!

LITTLE THINGS.—Springs are little things, but they are sources of large streams—a helm is a little thing, but it governs the course of a ship—a bridle bit is a little thing, but see its use and power; nails and pegs are little things, but they hold the large parts of large building together; a word a look, a frown—all are little things, but powerful for good or evil. Think of this, and mind the little things. Pay that little debt—it's promised, redeem it—if it's a shilling hand it over—you know not what important event hangs upon it. Keep your word sacredly—keep it to the children, they will mark it sooner than anybody else, and the effect will probably be as lasting as life. Mind the little things.

DRIVE AREAD!—"Drive ahead, my boys," was the sage advice of one who knew the necessity of constant exertion in the accomplishment of the designs and purposes of life. Drive ahead, keep about your business, no matter what it may be, so long as it is honest, and you are sure of coming out right side up in the long run. It is not the man who is all impulse to-day, and petrifaction to-morrow who succeeds in life, but the constant though slow laborer in the world's vineyard. We have quite too many fast men in the world for its good. They are of no special benefit to themselves, and certainly not to anybody else. They are as unstable as water; to-day one thing, and to-morrow smething else: always doing something but accompaning nothing. The slow, undeviating worker is the dive ahead man after all, and whose labors, because constant, are productive, beneficent and useful.

LUDICEOUS SCENE.—The following ludicrous scene is copied from an article in the April number of Blackwood, entitled a "Remonstrance with Dickens."

One of the most shameful recollections of our almost irreproachable life lies at the door of that wag, Dickens. We were attending service in a cathedral where we were a stranger, and had been shown into a pew already occupied by two old ladics. For a time we behaved with our wonted decorum, till some absurdity committed by the elder Weller, (one of Dicken's characters,) of which we had been reading the night before, rose up to haunt us. Had we been in the open air, a good laugh would have relieved us; but cabined, cribbed, confined as it were, the risibility expanded till our form swelled visibly, our face grew purple, and we saw a medical man in the next pew feel in his waist-coat pocket as he anxiously watched the veins in our forehead. The choral symptonies of the anthem invested Mr. Weller's image with fifty-fold absurdity, blending him, as they did, in his top-boots and shawl with angels ever bright and fair. Despairing of our ability to prevent an explosion, and feeling the danger becoming each moment more imminent, for India rubber itself must have given way under the secumulating pressure, we suddenly dived with our head under the shelf on which the prayer book rested, and laughed silently while our tears dropped like rain upon the foot stool. We were now beginning to grow calm, when, looking round, we may the two old ladies regarding us e were now beginning to grow calm, when, look-g round, we saw the two old ladies regarding us ith pious horror through their spectacles, and ding off to their own end of the pew. This set us with pious horror through their spectacles, and siding off to their own end of the pew. This set us of again, and down went our head in a vain, cetrich like attempt at concealment, for our shoulders and back, convulsively agitated from nape to waistband, told the internal struggle, to say nothing of sounds that occasionally broke forth, noways resembling the responses. Conscious that prebendary and preceptor were regarding us from their eminence, we again raised our head with desperate gravity, and shall never forget the agony of shame with which we beheld an aged verger sternly approaching, while two church wardens were quitting their pews with the faces of men determined to discharge a painful duty. Nevertheless, off we went again in a fit quite audible, and were eventually marched down the center aisle between rows of faces fixed in devout horror, with our bundherchief crammed nearly down our throat, and our watery eyes starting out of our head like a land crab's, and so, turning a corner, out under the old Saxon archway into the church wardens to femay by sixing down and a temptage and giving full vent to our wirth. Ment day, all repentant, we waited upon the dean, who, being himself a Pickwickian, gave us at colation in the most hindly way, and we caused a cepy of "Pickwicki" to be bound in moreceo and paid, with the incomption, "From a Penitum Sabbath header," which is to this day conspicuous on a shelf of the Episcopal liberary.
